Department Profile (2012-13 to 2017-18)

Department of Development Studies (DDS) was established in 1996. Since its inception DDS has been focussing on multidisciplinary research on development theories and practices. Many of the research conducted at the department have policy implications at immediate operative level as well as for long-term development strategy formulation.

Research: Our objective is to conduct research, which advances understanding of the complex economic, social and political processes of change in the poorer parts of the state and also to educate people, people's representatives and development practitioners at grassroots to understand these processes in a multidisciplinary perspective. Thrust areas of research are – 1. Participatory rural development, 2. Gender issues and development, 3. Housing, drinking water and education, 4. Civil society and Panchayatraj, 5. Rural development management.

Training: The DDS has developed a unique training module. This module differs from the conventional training modulus of both the academic and the bureaucratic varieties. Motivation and skill formation are the essential ingredients of the conventional training programs. They are necessary; but not sufficient. DDS has developed a critical social participation module with the intention of replacing the superficial and cosmetic kind of participation. Our training module aims at enabling the trainees to understand the social context in which they live and also to enable them to make use of the local resources to solve the problems. Ongoing and proposed training targets are: People's representatives of local bodies, Development administrators at the grassroots, Development beneficiaries

Reach: DDS has taken up the responsibility of disseminating its research output with the following two objectives: one, introducing the life of the marginalized to the larger society and two, bringing together all those who work in the field of development. All the stakeholders of development are informed and brought together with the ultimate objective of forming alternative development policies that are more in tune with the interest of the lower strata of the society. DDS uses and intends to use the following media to reach the research output to the people - bi-annual journal called Abhivridhi Adhyayana (Development Studies); Conducts regular Ph.D., programs and intends to take up short duration courses on alternative development subjects; Intends to launch a website to disseminate the research output to the larger society; Organizes development conferences – conference of all the development stakeholders.

Extension Services:

With the intention of intervening directly in the area of policy making and practice of development, the members of the department are working in various committees and bodies in various capacities: 1. Members of state level expert committee formed to strengthen Panchayats, 2. Advisers to District Planning Committees, 3. Advisers to NGOs working on rural development, 4. Members of State Level Rural Development Institution SIRD, Mysore, 5. Members of State Education Department to strengthen the community participation towards quality school education.

Centre For Study of Village Society

The Neo-liberal Economy based development policy and programmers have brought enormous changes in the Indian society in general, particularly the quality of life of village society and its economy as tremendous transition and transformation. These Transformations has lead to many crises. This rendered the condition of the rural society to be pathetic and pushed it to look for alternative lively wood sources. This led to the rampant migration and displacement of the rural folk from their living settlements seeking rehabilitation elsewhere. Social scientists and thinkers, NGOs and leaders have try to understand these problems and took up several measures, made recommendations and conceived programmes for the benefit of the affected. Yet it did not give the expected result, nor did it reach the needy. Owing to the feudal and hierarchical character of Indian society, the benefits meant for the poor have not been materialized; the land questions, women's, questions, Dalits questions, Social justices question and so many questions have not yet been settled. The function of modern institutions and development process taking place around are also in tune with the feudal character of the society. Therefore to address these issues of village society in particular a centre for village studies has been proposed by the department.

Proposed Projects

1. Analytical study of selected four villages
2. Rural agrarian life and its transitions
3. Analysis of functioning of selected 4 panchayats
4. Village Informal economy and Effects of New Financial Institutions
5. Village Society and Socially Marginalized groups
6. PRIs. functioning of Standing Committees
7. Questions of caste politics in Village social institutions
8. Village planning: Objective study
9. Learning from Village community

Centre for Extension Services

Department of Development Studies is undertaking extension services in the areas of local governance, primary education, primary health, local resource management (such as water, forest and so on) and rural market. Under local governance the department intends to offer a Certificate Course to Panchayat Members. The course aims at introducing the basics of procedural democracy finance management and development management to the panchayat members. Government of Karnataka has given permission to conduct the above course with a specified fee structure. The department has been involved in activating the local bodies meant for local participation in areas of primary education, primary health and local resources management. Every year a number of workshops are organized for the members of School Development and Management Committees (SDMC), Water Management Societies, Joint Forest Management Committees and Primary Health Workers. The department imparts basics of human rights and also rights perspectives of development to the Police and also to the civil society through workshops and other forms of extension services. At present all these activities are organized through facilities which are very temporary in nature. In the light of the importance of the extension services to the locals the department intends to have permanent facilities to carry on the extension services. The permanent extension service centre will have the following facilities – Rooms for the stay of 50 participants, Fully Equipped Seminar Halls, Fully Equipped Conference Halls, Studio to Produce Interactive Extension Programs Up- linking (through edu-Sat) Facilities
